Spreading The GOOD WORD

JIMMY PETERS LOOKED at his reflection in the mirror, shook his fist angrily at himself and muttered, "Go on, you're a coward! All you have to do is walk up to the girl an' introduce yourself. But you are scared. Scared of a girl!"

"Who ya scared of, Jimmy, huh?" a curious voice inquired. "It's that redheaded Marilyn, huh? The one that just moved two houses away, huh?"

Jimmy stared at his little sister coldly. "Mind your own business, Cathy," he advised her, "and you won't get into trouble. See? Now beat it!"

"I was just askin'!" Cathy protested, retreating hastily down the steps. "Gee whiz! Gee," she continued, talking to herself, "a sister isn't s'posed to know anything these days, I guess. Gosh, I'll bet I could get him to meet that red-headed Marilyn easy! In fact..."

Five minutes later, Cathy Peters was gossiping busily to her very best friend, Susie. "An' my big brother, Jimmy, says that red-headed Marilyn is the funniest-lookin' girl he's ever seen! Why, he said he wouldn't even talk to her unless a p'liceman or somebody made him! You won't tell anybody, will you?"

"Oh, no!" Susie assured Cathy. "I won't, honest. I guess I hafta go now. G'bye!"

Cathy watched Susie as she proceeded down the street. She watched Susie stop in front of the house where that red-headed Marilyn lived. She watched Susie walk up the steps of the front porch.

Jimmy Peters was still bawling himself out when a red-headed streak of lightning came shooting up to his house. "Are you Jimmy Peters?" the lightning streak demanded. "I'm Marilyn..."

"Gosh! I know!" Jimmy could scarcely believe his eyes. "It's swell of you to come over an'..."

"And give you a piece of my mind! How dare you say what you said? Who cares if you ever do talk to me? Who cares what your opinion is of certain people's looks? Who even wants to..."

"Now wait a minute!" Jimmy was baffled, but he meant to get to the bottom of things. "Suppose we just sit on the porch swing and find out what this is all about!"

"I won't!" Marilyn shouted as she plumped down into the swing.

"You see, I couldn't have said those things," Jimmy started to explain. "I just couldn't! Why, you have no idea..."

From behind the front hedges, Cathy Peters could see her brother talking to that red-headed Marilyn. At first, that Marilyn kept looking angry. Then she started to smile.

Cathy began to play a skipping game on the sidewalk. "Guess I fixed it," she thought smugly, waving to Susie across the way. Aloud, she said, "Thanks, Susie!"

"For what?" Susie wanted to know.

But Cathy just kept right on skipping.

a Woman's WORK

NOW, SEE HERE, JUDY!" Her mother's voice was quite angry. "You're not going to get out of helping me this time! Every time there's some housecleaning to do, you seem to have a very important date...someplace else!"

Judy had to admit, shamefacedly, that her mother was right. "But, gee whiz, mom," she promised, "today will be entirely different! Today, I'll help you every bit I can, honestly!"

Wrapping herself in a huge apron, Judy caught up a fistful of dust cloths and some furniture polish. "I'll start in the living room, mother," she called.

As she started to dust the magazine rack, Judy noticed a copy of her favorite comics book peeking out from among the other magazines. "Wow!" she exclaimed. "It's the new 'Cookie'...this, I gotta read!" By the time Judy had finished the last story (which she read three times), she was astonished to see that her mother had finished doing the living room.

"Sorry, mom," she apologized, "I was swept away! But don't worry about the upstairs, will you? I'll start on your bedroom right now!"

Up in the bedroom, Judy noticed a fascinating new fact...her mother had bought some new hats! "Here goes for a fashion show," she said, brushing her hair smooth. "Bet this one with the roses will be positively too...too!"

Somehow, while Judy was trying on the new hats, and practicing new hair-do's to go with them, her mother seemed to have gotten through most of the upstairs rooms.

"There's still the kitchen, mother," she called cheerily. "I can do that in no time flat! Just watch me...I does everything!"

Armed with a can of cleanser and a large cloth, Judy set out to polish up the kitchen...but there again, she found that something new had definitely been added. "Yummm," she murmured, lifting the lid of the cookie jar. "Fresh ginger snaps! What I couldn't do with a little refreshment!"

She poured a tall glass of milk and went to work on the cookie jar. It seemed only a few minutes later when Judy looked up to see her mother mopping the floor. "Oh, mom," she said reproachfully. "You shouldn't!"

Judy started to take the mop from her mother's hands, when the phone rang out in the front hall. "Don't bother, mother, I'll get it," she said, running towards the phone.

"Hello?" she said, lifting the receiver. "Uh-huh, it's me. My goodness, you don't say so! Really? She did? And what did he say? Really? He did?"

A half-hour later, the phone call was over. Judy collapsed weakly into an armchair in the living room and remarked to her mother, "Honestly, mom, the house is spotless, but I'm exhausted! I never realized housework could be so tough!"

Judy's mom smiled.

"COOKIE"
